IDENTITY DEVELOPMENT · CONCEPT 03 — CONTINUUM

شركة لفيف لمستلزمات الحلاقة والكوافير والتجميل

THE IDEA

One stroke. Two scripts.

Latin L and Arabic ل begin the same way, with a single descending stem. Continuum writes that stem once, then lets each script finish its own letter, so the mark is bilingual by construction rather than by translation.

01

Write the L

The stem descends and turns sharply right along the baseline. Square, Latin and architectural, it is drawn in matte black.

02

Return beneath: complete the ل

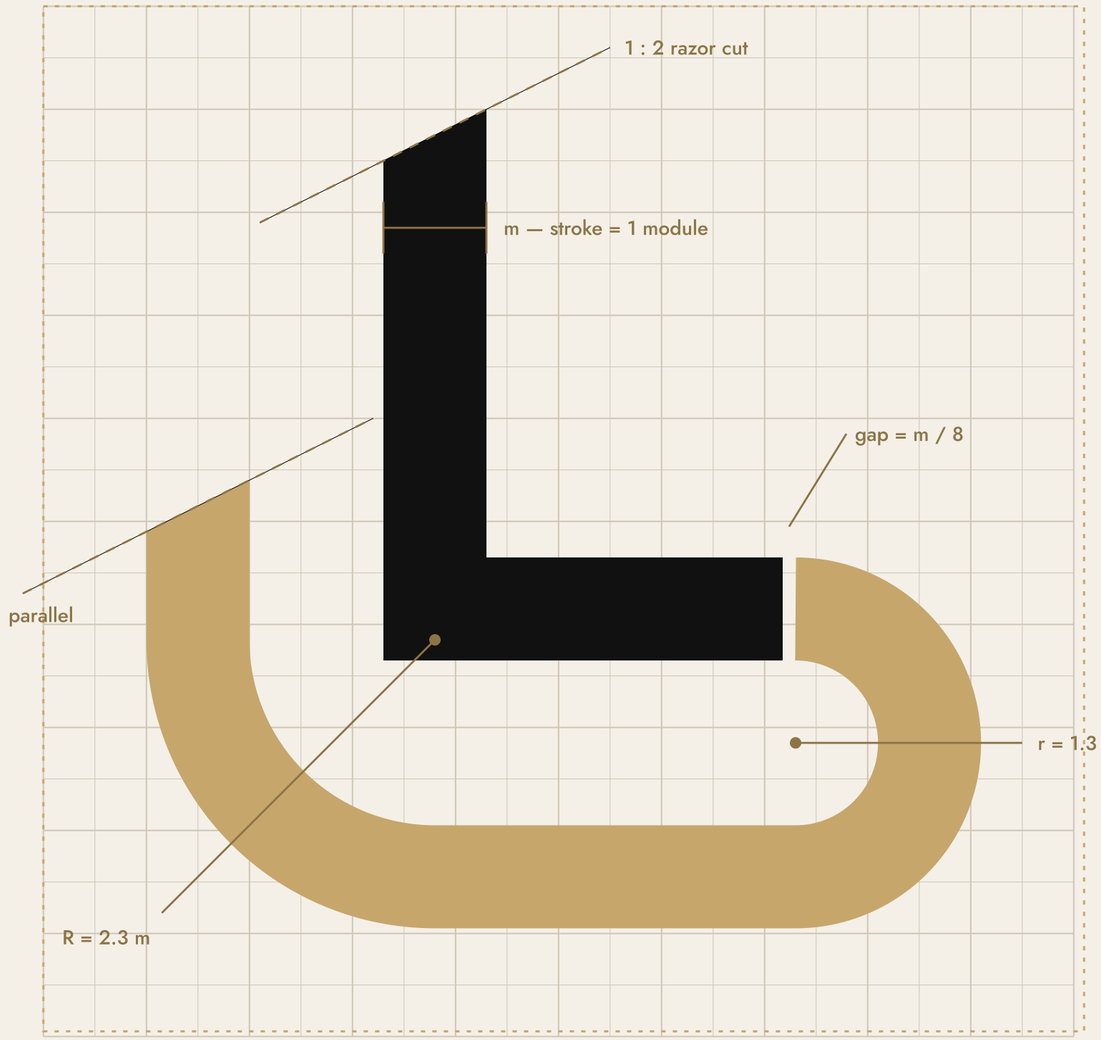

Without lifting the pen, the stroke hairpins back underneath and sweeps up into the bowl of the Arabic lam, in champagne. The turn is the silhouette of the salon hair pin.

03

Cut both ends

Both terminals are sliced on one 1:2 razor line. A hairline gap marks where Latin hands over to Arabic, so the mark still reads as two letters in one colour.

CONSTRUCTION

Built on one module

The whole mark is drawn with a single stroke of weight m. The hairpin turns on a radius of 1.3 m and the Arabic bowl on 2.3 m. Both terminals are cut on parallel 1:2 lines, the same angle used on every stem in the Latin and Arabic wordmarks. The hand-over from L to ل is marked by a gap of m/8.

Primary lockup

Below 240 px wide, the lockup switches to the Regular wordmark weight (shown).

LOCKUPS

Four arrangements, one system

Each lockup is drawn as an outline. None needs a font installed, so every file reproduces exactly in signage, print and embroidery.

Black and ivory carry the range; champagne is kept for caps, rules and the hairpin bowl. The symbol is the hero on every front, so the family reads at shelf distance before any copy does.

BARBER APRON

Black waxed canvas, tan leather straps and brass rivets. The symbol is satin-stitched: ivory for the Latin stroke, champagne for the Arabic. The pocket wordmark is the Regular weight, which holds its shape in thread.

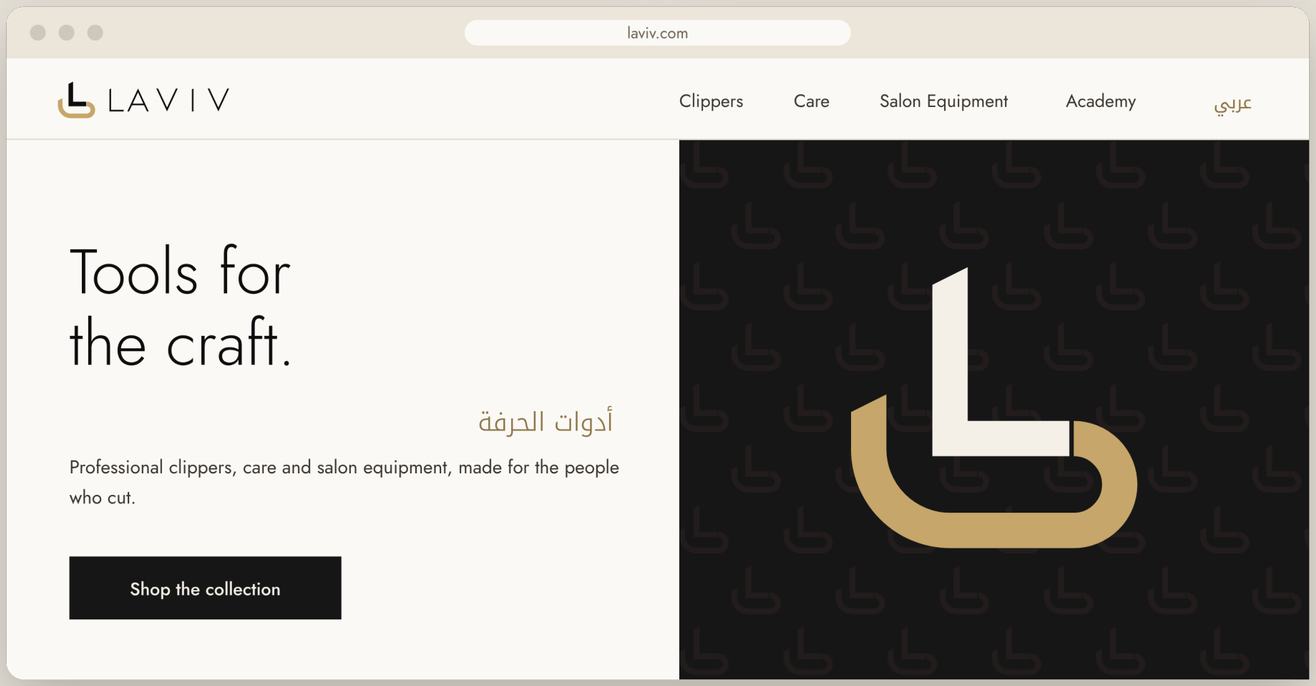

CLIPPER · T-BLADE TRIMMER · GUARDS · CUTTING COMB

On tools the symbol is laser-etched or pad-printed in ivory or champagne. The inline bilingual wordmark sits on narrow parts such as comb spines and guard edges, where the full lockup would not fit.
